Abstract. Self directed learning is one of factors which influences students' learning achievement. This study aims at finding out Self Directed Learning of the Students of Graduate School of Islamic Culture and History Study Program at Universitas Islam Negeri Raden Fatah Palembang and finding out the aspects which best describe their Self directed learning. The problems of this study are: 1) how is Self Directed Learning of the Students of Graduate School of Islamic Culture and History Study Program at Universitas Islam Negeri Raden Fatah Palembang?; and 2) What aspects best describe their Self directed learning? The samples of this study were 24 students of Graduate School of Islamic Culture and History Study Program at Universitas Islam Negeri Raden Fatah Palembang from the second and the fourth semesters. The data were gained through spreading ready made questionnaires by Williamson to the samples of this study. The data were then analyzed using Self-Rating Scale for Self-Directed Learning. The result of this study showed that 15 (62.5%) students had high self directed learning, 6 (25%) students had moderate self directed learning, and 3 (12.5%) students had low self directed learning. The aspects which best describe their Self directed learning are the ability to select the best method for their own learning and to decide their own learning strategies, the responsibility for their own learning and for identifying their areas of deficit, the intention to learn more about other cultures and languages they are frequently exposed to, the ability to identify their role within a group, and the need to share information with others.
